

Sweet Talk

Valentine's Day is less than two weeks away. Now that you've made and sent your cards and invitations (the invitations should have already been mailed), you can start thinking about decorations.

Nothing is more romantic than candle light. This project sets the mood for the day and is so simple to do.

Candy hearts are a tradition for Valentine's Day. They are fun to give, but I don't know who actually eats them (I prefer chocolate, thank you). Instead of a candy treat, use them to decorate candles.

I am always finding little votive cups for 49¢. With a little glue and a few boxes of hearts you can make a whole set of decorative votives and they don't melt when the candle is lit.

Continue your message on portable chalkboards (found this at Goodwill to for less than a buck!).

Put one at each place setting for dinner and give to you your guests as party favors or group them together for a unique centerpiece.
